"Iris" and "Pearl"

Dear SWCHS,

I just want to let you know what a wonderful year we have had with Iris and Pearl.

Even though the girls have very different personalities (Iris is shy and Pearl is NOT) they get along great. We can see they have also put some spunk back into our elderly cat Rusty. To our Fox Terriers surprise Pearl has designated herself as their best friend. On the other hand Iris is trying to snuggle with our zebra finches.

Double the trouble, double the fun!

"Stitch" (a.k.a. "Reggie")

Dear SWCHS,

I was just writing you a letter to let you know how much we appreciate your services. We adopted Stitch (a.k.a. Reggie) the pit-bull puppy last fall and we absolutely love him. He is so sweet and he loves everyone.

We also recently adopted two cats from your shelter. Monty and Winston are the sweetest cats ever. They are both comical and never cease to entertain us with their silly antics.

We thank you for allowing us the opportunity to own such wonderful pets. We will now make your facility one of our first stops when searching for future pets.

Thank you,

Brad, Ashley, Reggie, Monty, and Winston

South Wood County Humane Society Kids Club Carwash

On August 15th the shelter's "Pet Pals Kids Club" had their first ever car wash, raising $204 towards the spay/neuter of shelter pets. The club did all the washing with the help of volunteers and staff. "Pet Pals" is new to the shelter this year and is proving successful in giving children in the community a chance to get involved. The club meets every third Sunday of every month from 2 - 4 p.m. and the annual membership is $40. To enroll your children in the "Pet Pals Kids Club" please contact the shelter.

South Wood County Humane Society Endowment Fund

The future of the South Wood County Humane Society is determined by the decisions we make today. If you are interested in providing perpetual support of our organization, please consider a contribution to our endowment fund.

Endowment funds help us "fund the future." Here's how — the principal balance is invested. As the principal earns interest and dividends over time, we use a portion of the earnings to support our annual needs, while the remainder of the earnings are reinvested for future growth. The principal of the account is never spent, which makes the fund "endowed" and available for growth in perpetuity.

To make a tax-deductible contribution to our Endowment Fund, choose one or more of these options:

- Make check payable to SWCHS Endowment Fund, and mail to Community Foundation of SWCHS, 478 E. Grand Ave., Wisconsin Rapids, WI 54494.
- Make a secure online donation at www.cfswc.org
- Create your own named fund, designated to support the SWCHS — call 715.423.3863 to establish your fund at the Community Foundation.
- Make a bequest in your will to the SWCHS Endowment Fund.

There's no better time to help the South Wood County Humane Society, so please consider a charitable donation before the year's end.

We Need You As A Volunteer!

ASK BENJI & CAROL

Dear Benji,

I recently took my puppy, Taffy, to her first vet appointment and unfortunately the vet informed me that she has tracheobronchitis. I noticed she had coughed a couple of times before I took her to the vet, but I thought nothing of it. Her vet was very helpful in explaining this illness to me and she is now on antibiotics. I have been a pet owner all of my life and this is the first time I have ever heard of this. I thought maybe you could help other owners like myself by explaining "kennel cough" to them through your article.

Thank You,
Nancy M.

Dear Nancy,

You are not the first person to write concerning this matter. I think your suggestion to elaborate on this illness for the sake of pet owners as well as their pets is a great idea.

Tracheobronchitis, referred to as "kennel cough", is usually caused by the bacteria Bordetella bronchiseptica. It can also be caused by several viruses. These can commonly be found in environments that house dogs, such as boarding facilities, pounds, humane societies, etc...

The period from the time your dog is exposed to the time symptoms appear can vary, but in general it seems to be roughly three to five days. Pet owners often notice this condition when their dog coughs as if they have something stuck in their throat. Pneumonia may also occur as a complication of this condition. The best course of action to take if you suspect your pet may have "kennel cough" is to consult your veterinarian who will most likely prescribe an antibiotic and/or cough suppressant.

Hope this helps,
Benji

Dear Benji,

We adopted an adult Labrador mix from your shelter five weeks ago. When I showed interest in him the employees at the shelter informed me that his previous owners said they had trouble with house training. We knew that housetraining him was going to be quite a task because of this, but that didn't influence our decision. In the beginning he was doing well with only a few accidents but as time progressed the accidents became more frequent. We were hoping you could help us by offering suggestions on how to successfully achieve our goal.

Patiently waiting,
The Hanemanns

Dear Patiently Waiting,

I respect your patience on this matter and I will try my best to be of help. Housetraining can be a frustrating process for the owner as well as the pet.

The first thing you will need to do is establish a word you will use when you catch him going in the house. Words like "yuck", "no", or just their name in a startling tone seem to work well. As soon as this word is used you must immediately take him out and let him know you are taking him outside to go "potty". Upon completion provide your dog with praise and a treat you have designated for training. This method is only effective if you catch him in the act otherwise it is too late to implement and nothing can be done at that point.

While he is home alone I would suggest keeping him in a large crate or confined area in your house furnished with a blanket, water and a favorite toy. This will help you by using his desire to keep his area free of messes to your advantage. I would recommend taking him out to go to the bathroom on a schedule at all times until you are certain he is housetrained. Feeding on a schedule will also prove helpful.

Good Luck,
Benji

Dear Carol,

I have a problem with my cat and acne. When I first brought him home I noticed a little swelling of his chin. I gave it time and as it went by the swelling went down and everything seemed to be normal. I talked to my veterinarian and he told me that it might be acne and to replace his plastic food and drinking bowls with ones made of stainless steel.

I took his advice and the swelling never returned again, but now he seems to have black spots where the swelling used to be. I'm sure this is not associated with the switch in "dinnerware" and I've thought that maybe he is just prone to this acne.

I need to know if this makes any sense to you, and if so, will this last his lifetime?

Looking for an answer,
Nancy P.

Dear Nancy,

You may be on to something when you ask if your cat may be prone to this disorder. It sounds to me like your cat could definitely be susceptible to acne and this might be a lifetime issue unless you take him in to see your vet.

The black spots you see on his chin are similar to blackheads that humans can get. Unlike humans cats don't have a daily facial cleanser that will prevent or eliminate this problem. I would recommend that you treat his chin with a warm washcloth soak daily. You will also want to swab his chin with a little rubbing alcohol. This procedure should help you eliminate the blackheads by loosening these plugs up. If this ends up being of no help you might want to consider a path of antibiotics through the course of his life. Either way your I'm sure your vet can provide you with the best method.

Thank you for writing,
Carol

Dear Carol,

I am fifteen years old and I have wanted to adopt a kitten from my Humane Society for quite some time, but my parents have concerns about scratching in their home. I feel that if I offer my kitten some kind of outlet, like a scratching post, she will not feel the need to scratch anywhere else. My parents strongly disagree with this and tell me the only way I can adopt a kitten is if I de-claw her before she even enters our home.

I have briefly researched this procedure and to me it almost seems cruel to take your kittens nails away. One thing that I did find are ways to actually give your kitten a manicure to lessen any damage that comes long with scratching. I have tried sharing the information I have found with my parents, but they won't seem to budge on the matter. Do you have any info that may sway their decision?

Sincerely,
Veronica Luther

Dear Veronica,

I agree that de-clawing your kitten seems very cruel, but many pet owners still do so to protect damage in their home. There are two very valid points to your argument with your parents. They have every right to want to protect their home from any damage a kitten with claws can create. You also have the right to your opinion on this subject and it sounds to me like you have the information to back it up.

A kitten's claws have many different uses such as scratching, climbing, and hunting. When you take these claws away, your kitten may feel defenseless and start using her teeth to express herself. This can cause a whole new set of problems for you and your family.

I believe that you have found better ways to protect your belongings like trimming with a cat nail clippers that can be found in the grooming section at your local pet supply center. I think this route would be a good medium for you and your parents.

When you start to do this you will want to clip a small amount then a little more each time. The kitten's vein in each nail will begin to recede over time allowing you to clip them shorter. You will want to make sure you can identify these veins and avoid clipping them. Clipping the vein will cause the nail to bleed and is also very uncomfortable for your kitten.

If your parents continue to stand their ground you have to accept this so my advice to you would be to wait until you have a place of your own. I'm sure your kitten will thank you for it someday.

Carol

Rats are no longer just found in laboratories, they are cuddling up to families and can be found as pets in many homes today. Unlike the "sewer rats" you've seen on television, domesticated rats are very friendly, interactive pets. Rats will ride on your shoulder and even cuddle with you! Rats are very easy pets to house, feed, and keep happy. Like most pets rats just want love and affection.

Housing your Rat

Your rat will require enough space to have an exercise wheel, water bottle, food dish, a little house, and some toys with room left over to play. A plain metal cage will suffice, but one with tubes to run through is an even better idea. Your rat will need an area that is considered his "safe zone". It is very important that when he is in this zone (small house or tube) that you do not stick your hands anywhere near his area. This makes him feel like he has a place to hide.

Feeding Your Rat

There are many diets available for pet rats. The standard "mix" is mainly seed based and your rat might only eat half of what's available. This does not assure whole nutrition for your rat. Your best bet is to purchase a food which is bricked so your rat has no other option but to get a little of everything. Always make sure there is fresh water daily.

Socializing Your Rat

Like with most pets, the socialization of rats is very important and is a crucial part of adolescence. A well socialized rat will go on to learn great tricks like walking ropes and coming when called upon. The key to socialization is to play with your rat and introduce him to other people as well as other pets.

Litter Box Troubleshooting

Seven reasons why your cat may not be using his litter box:

1. Your cat's litter box is not kept clean enough to his liking.
2. His litter box has been moved from its original place.
3. You have recently switched to another brand of litter.
4. You are housing too many animals for your home.
5. The cleaning solution used to sanitize the litter box is offensive to your cat.
6. Your cat is accidentally kept away from his litter box.
7. Your cat's routine has been changed drastically, and they're stressed out.

A golden retriever named Hannah was a familiar face here at the South Wood County Humane Society for many years. Hannah always welcomed visitors to the shelter with a friendly wag. In 1998 Hannah retired from her shelter duties and moved to the country. In the spring of 1999 "Hannah's Run" was constructed in her honor outside the Humane Society building for shelter dogs to socialize, exercise and play in. Hannah passed away in September 2002 and will always be remembered as a very special dog.

Hannah proudly wearing her alumnus bandanna at the 2002 SWCHS Walk for Kindness event.

Hannah's HALO is our seasonal donation program with all proceeds benefiting the South Wood County Humane Society. With each monetary donation increment of $5.00 designated towards Hannah's HALO, a white Christmas light will be lit outside the shelter building and your name(s) placed on the inside walls of the Humane Society designating you as a Hannah HALO supporter. We hope to have lights lit along the fence of Hannah's Run and our inside walls covered with names! If desired, donations can be made 'in Honor and/or In Memory' of pets, family or friends. The sparkling white lights outside will be a beautiful holiday display and a reminder to our community that pets light up our lives!
